

FaithLives Fellowship Application

It is becoming more challenging to live out Christian values and beliefs in this secular world. Many young leaders are navigating life alone, feeling isolated, and asking essential questions about how to be an engineer, lawyer, doctor, investor, doctor, civil servant, and live out their faith. Tell us about the questions you are asking yourself related to career, God, purpose, and direction. Please also include how you remain firm in your faith in this secular world.

David Brooks, New York Times columnist, and conservative political and cultural commentator, reflected on the deeply divided times we are experiencing as a nation at a recent Aspen Ideas Festival. He talked about ways to build trusting relationships. Listen and share with us which of the ways he discusses resonates most with you and why.

Please tell us about your field and profession and how God is or isn't aligned with it.

A fellowship requirement is to share your story and write two related articles, which will be published on the FaithLives Fellows section of our website. What would you likely write (We are curious and know this is raw, and that's what we want to see. We will work with you to build on this idea, refine it, or start from scratch)

A FaithLives fellow takes action. Tell us about the project/initiative you'd like to create and launch, who the audience is, why, and what purpose it would serve.

Is there anything else you want to tell us regarding your fellowship application?
